

Site Reflection 5

David Bath

今日は4時に私たちのレッスンを始めました。今日のレッスンについて日本の色を学びました。このレッスンはとてもよかったです。まず、子供は日本の数字を復習しました。それから、日本のマナーを復習しました。たくさん子供は覚えました。次に子供はグループに別れました。私たちは子供に虹を知っていますかを尋ねました。それから、私たちは日本の虹の違いを学びました。

そして、日本の日は赤や日本の月は黄色を学びました。日本の文化は特異なのでこれは大切です。次に日本の色を学びました。私は色を上げながら、子供は日本の色の名前を話しました。それから、子供は日本の色を勉強しました。

その後で、色のテストをしました。子供は覚えにくいので少し問題でした。だけど、もっと練習の後で子供は覚えました。それから、大会がありました。すべて子供は色を持ちました。私は色の名前を話した時、子供は正しい色を上げました。子供は大会を楽しみました。次の時、私は子供の練習をもっと手伝うつもりです。

今日、私はレッスンが上手な先生を要るのを懲りました。先生は上手な教えることがあったる子供はもっと覚えます。子供には早く習いにくいです。

Reading Reflection 4

David Bath

I found the reading and discussion to be very interesting and it went a lot deeper than I thought it would. The reading itself went into ethics and many different issues. In the class itself the discussion went into various people's cultures and the ethics they were raised on growing up. For instance Americans tip, Japanese show respect to elders, etc. I think this is important because we all have a different perspective of right and wrong.

The discussion really made me think, especially when we had to be split into groups to discuss euthanasia. I thought that both sides brought up good points. I would hear one person and be completely convinced but then someone else would retort them and I would completely rethink my position. I found it interesting how it seemed that everyone's backgrounds really shaped their opinion on the subject.

I myself do think that euthanasia is alright, if someone is in pain and going to die anyways then why not. But after hearing the discussion I learned a lot more into the subject than I thought would be there. I think that was the important thing, because with a diverse group and varying opinions you can see things much easier from other perspectives and have a wide range of arguments and counterarguments.

For instance I hadn't thought at all about people who might have mental disorders or be in a coma. If the family consents does the individual? Also looking at things like support groups was something I didn't think of either. All in all I learned a lot from this class, that a healthy dialogue on a subject from a diverse group can really break the bounds of things that may seem black and white, and make touchy subjects become much more grey.
